

Dear Hiring Team,

My name is Casper De Weirt, and I am a student at Howest Digital Arts and Entertainment, currently pursuing a major in Independent Game Production.

Although I still have one year remaining in my studies, I am actively working to further develop my skills and prepare myself for a career in the game industry. I am eager to gain hands-on experience in a professional environment, contribute to meaningful projects, and learn from an experienced team.

Throughout my studies, I have gained experience with a wide range of tools, including Blender, Unity, Photoshop, Substance 3D Painter, substance sampler, Rider and Excel. I am familiar with the programming language C# and have dabbled in html. In addition, I have developed skills in game design and project management, allowing me to understand both the creative and organizational sides of game development and therefore giving me the ability to jump in where needed.

For me, game development is all about learning new things and using them to make games that people enjoy playing. I've always loved playing games, and nothing makes me more excited and curious than being able to make my own and give people the chance to enjoy themselves as I have. I want to make projects that I'm proud of and that I can see people playing and having fun.

In applying for this job at your company, I want to gain more knowledge in the field of game development and also work hard to contribute positively towards your company projects. It would be very much appreciated if you can consider my application and if you are interested, conduct an interview as well.

Yours sincerely,

Casper De Weirt
